On May 16, H.E. Ambassador Elkanah Odembo hosted a reception to celebrate the Washington, D.C. screening of "The First Grader." The reception was attended by approximately 100 people from the think tank, academia, and diplomatic communities as well as Congressional and Executive Branch staff. The film's director, Justin Chadwick, producer, Richard Harding and star Naomie Harris also attended the reception. Ambassador Odembo spoke to the audience about the history of the film and the country's decision to make primary education free for all Kenyans. He also expressed his gratitude to the film's producer and director for choosing to film in Kenya.

Following the reception, the guests viewed the film and participated in a Q&A discussion with Chadwick, Harding and Harris. Notably, all three expressed their gratitude to the people of Kenya for their hospitality during the filming.
